Our main character, Dunstan Ramsay (originally Dunstable), is born in a small Ontario town (Deptford, which lends its name to the trilogy of novels that this begins), and, as per the title of the novel, finds that he is throughout his life fulfilling the role of the 'fifth business'. In operatic theory (Davies was a big opera fan), the fifth business is the background roles in the story that don't star but are still necessary for things to move along.

This is the question that lies at the heart of Robertson Davies's elegant trilogy comprising Fifth Business, The Manticore, and World of Wonders. Indeed, Staunton's death is the central event of each of the three novels, and Rashomon -style, each circles round to view it from a different perspective.

Fifth Business by Robertson Davies Plot Summary | LitCharts

In operatic theory (Davies was a big opera fan), the fifth business is the background roles in the story that don't star but are still necessary for things to move along. The idea of Dunstan as not being the main character in the `story' is a rather complicated one; after all, is there really a story independent on the one that we are reading?
